The first edition of the Irish Bible contained in one volume.

This edition was printed at the expense of R. Boyle, and others, in roman type, chiefly for the Gaelic-speaking Highlanders in Scotland. Robert Kirk was responsible for the transliteration from the Irish character. The printing was undertaken at the solicitation of James Kirkwood. The book never found favour in the Highland parishes of Scotland. The people were as ignorant of the Roman type as of the Irish character.

Unpaged. Last signatures: Old Testament, L 1 4, with tables on verso and following leaf; New Testament, L 10, followed by tables ending on L 12. Bound in red morocco, hand tooled, with gilt edges.

The first atlas of Scotland. Most of the maps were drawn by the Rev. Timothy Pont from personal survey about 1608. His work was carried out at the expense of Sir John Scot of Scotstarvit, at whose death the maps were handed over to Robert Gordon of Straloch, by whom they were corrected to date and edited. The maps were then sent to Blaeu at Amsterdam where they were engraved and incorporated in his atlas.

The New York Public Library has two copies, one plain, the other with the maps and coats of arms colored.
